Leg Club Foundation welcomes affiliation with British Association of Sclerotherapists.

The UK's charity for lower limb and leg ulcer related conditions, The Lindsay Leg Club Foundation (LLCF), are pleased to announce that it is now affiliated with the British Association of Sclerotherapists (BSA).

The BAS brings together doctors, nurses, and other healthcare professionals involved in the treatment and management of venous disease. The organisation is committed to improving standards in wound care through evidence-based education and collaborative practice.

This new association reflects a shared commitment by both organisations to enhancing health system performance and delivering improved outcomes through prevention and effective management of chronic conditions. By working together, the LLCF and BAS aim to provide better information, resources, and support to people affected by leg ulcers and other lower limb conditions

Ellie Lindsay OBE, Founder and Life President of the LLCF said: "I am delighted that we are now affiliated with the BSA. There is genuine potential to learn from each other when it comes to disseminating public health information related to wound care and general wellbeing"

BSA Chairman Alastair Lewis said: "Our organisations share a commitment to the championing of person-centred approaches that support healing and education."
